

January 18, 2023

Hello again, everyone. Grace and peace to you.

This Sunday we'll hear together: the people who walked in darkness have seen a great light; and for those who sat in the region and shadow of death light has dawned. We'll hear it twice - once from Isaiah and once from the Gospel of Matthew. We'll be getting to month after the solstice this week and the longer days/earlier dawns are noticeable now. For me that means more and more light appearing over the hills day by day as I walk with our dog early in the mornings. Mika appreciates this, because she enjoys walking in daylight about 300% more than walking in the dark - she startles easily and doesn't seem to like car headlights in the early, early morning (Just to clarify: if it's a choice between walking in the dark/dealing with those headlights and no walk at all, she will go for the walk in the dark every time).

I'm at the hospital more now - Mondays and Fridays in addition to my on-call hours on weeknights and a couple of weekend days per month - and so I'm up and walking earlier than before and have had lots of chances to see those bits of light begin to appear in the west. It makes me think of the way we hear in the Bible about light dawning on people who walked in darkness and the gentle way that sunrises come. When we get knocked over by something, knocked into the dark, sometimes bits of light and hope are about all we can take in at one time, and sometimes it just isn't time yet. We are accustomed to sunrises happening gradually. If the sun were to suddenly appear in the sky from one moment to the next some morning, we wouldn't be ready, would we?

I walk with Mika morning after morning from our place to a Park-n-Ride and back, and Mika's pupils and mine have time to adjust as the light comes once again. Thinking on the way sunrises don't happen might sound silly to you, and if so that's ok. I count these things as mercies from God - not only that sunrises don't happen in one fell swoop but that bits of encouragement and strength and goodness and hope can be very powerful when losses or changes or setbacks or disasters have left us in an emotionally difficult places. Our hearts and minds often seem to adapt to a more isolated state as we take in and process difficult and painful things. Becoming open, or more open to the rest of the world again doesn't happen all of a sudden any more than sunrises do. This seems to be how we're made.

I'm motivated to be out a little earlier each day to be there for some of the first bits of light showing up in the west. That's convenient, since I have to be up early anyway. There seems to be something or some things God has in mind to tell me along the way. God bless your week, evening and morning and in between.

Offering Envelopes On Order

There has been a delay in ordering the offering envelopes for 2023. For the time being, please use pew envelopes or just a plain white envelope for your offering. It would be helpful if you write "weekly offering" in the memo field of your check. If you remember your envelope number, it would help for you to write that on the envelope, but if you don't remember, it will be OK, as we can look up your name. If you have any envelopes left from previous years, you can use those, as the printed date on the envelope is not significant.

This was not intended to be an ad for online giving, but I will mention it here anyway. You may send your offering electronically, using the information at <https://northlakelutheran.org/giving/>.

I appreciate your patience as we deal with this problem. It may take up to eight weeks to receive our new envelopes.

Treasurer
